A Bryant Pond Boy on Parade in New Jersey

This is my first attempt as a reporter. I am trying to make this as plain as possible and still have it sound as I saw it.

It is sometimes thought that some occasions are not held as near our hearts as they might. Memorial Day is one I wish to show that it is held very close, there, as much as it is in less congested localities.

I will do my best to assure you, who read this slight account, that everyone, everywhere, holds Memorial Day as a very important day and a day when all, rich and poor, may pay respect to those who have stood their last roll call and have answered the call of the Great Commander-in-Chief.

As it will be learned, I am a Woodstock boy, have lived a good many years at Bryant Pond. I could not be at home on Memorial Day, so wished to let my buddies know that I thought of them to that end, I am writing an account of the parade in which I took part here.

One of my fellow workmen asked me if I was over seas during the war. I said, "yes." Then he asked me to join the veterans of foreign wars, which I did later. Let me say right here, it is a wonderful organization to belong to, especially my post, No. 1302. Here is the account I wish to make of the part my post took in the parade, also how they wish to be of service to those who will accept.

We have about one hundred members. Several meetings before Memorial Day, the Commander asked that we turn out a good number of men for Memorial Day. We wished to make the children happy after the march, so the night before, (Thursday) we assembled at our quarters and prepared a lunch for the march. We made 450 sandwiches, had 20 or more pounds of pickles, two kinds of sandwiches, about 30 cases of soda on ice. These things all went down, but we felt it was pay enough if those who ate with us enjoyed themselves. It was free to anyone who cared to come in and get their lunch.

Friday, at nine o'clock we assembled at the Soldiers' Home on Belgrade Drive. After a short delay the column started to move. With the colors at our head, flanked on one side by our post flag, on the other by the Hudson County Council Banner, V. F. W. Next in line was the police department of Kearney, N. J., after them came the Hudson County Council V. F. W., led by Commander Hill. He also led our post, as our Post Commander, Frank McGivers, marched with the members of the police department, who are members of our post. It is needless to say he is a good commander, also a good cop.

I was not at the head of the line, why I will explain later, so am not sure who was next, but I believe it was the G. A. R., they were in cars as the hike was too long for those gentlemen of another war to walk. There were fifteen or twenty cars for those members of the Grand Army. I neglected to say that a large band was leading the police.

Following the cars a band led between 200 and 300 Girl Scouts, next came the band and then several hundred Boy Scouts and a very large number of school children. There were about three thousand in line. I was honored by being appointed as an aide to the grand marshal. He placed me in command of the second division, which numbered about 1,000 or more. The line of march was through the city's business streets.

It was very evident that everyone was deeply in thought that day, of the days that had passed, as they lined the sidewalk for several miles, as the soldiers of all wars from the war of 1861-65 to that of 1914-18 passed in view, so to speak.

As we stood at attention to listen to the prayer before dismissal, I wondered if all of us would be together next year on Memorial Day. As I said the attendance of our post was very good. We had about 65 in line. Those not in uniform, wearing the V. F. W. arm band. Commander McGivers was pleased the way his men helped him put the post on the map.

In closing this article I would like to suggest and urge every man who was overseas with the A. E. F., to join the V. F. W., no matter if he has to go fifty miles to do so. I feel proud to wear the cross of Malta, which is our emblem. Hoping this does not condemn me as a bum reporter, as I am not a writer, just a plain American, one of the A. E. F. Yours in comradeship, George F. Hudson, Officer of the Day, Wilson-Greggman Post, 1302, W. E. W. Kearney, N. J.

NORWAY, ME.

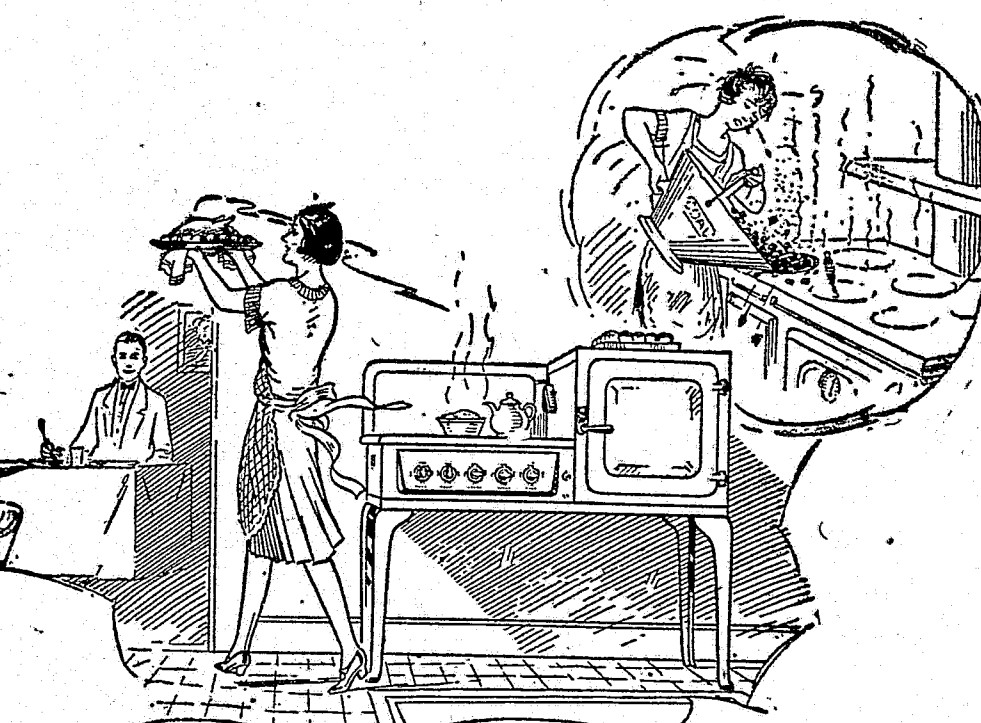

"There is No Ice Cream Like Stone's."

For year 'round comfort But more especially--a summer necessity!

WHY stand over a roaring fire in a sticky kitchen on hot days like these when an electric range will do your cooking so comfortably?

Electric ranges do not throw off heat for the oven is insulated and keeps it within. You can even set a vase of flowers on top of your stove and they will not wilt. . . . that's why cooking electrically is so comfortable. There are many other desirable features, too, such as temperature control (merely setting an indicator and your baking heat is maintained automatically) . . . and then cooking results are always certain, no guess-work which is a decided advantage.

We have a glistening all-white model that will just harmonize with your kitchen, selling for $139.50 completely installed. Don't let hot weather bother you any longer, come in and look them over.

—and speaking of hot weather . . . how do you heat water these days?

An automatic electric hot water heater does a wonderful job and you never have to give it a thought. It too, is insulated with a 3-inch cork insulation of granulated cork preserving the heat which makes for economy and comfort.

It gives you a life-time service without a second's consideration. Simply turn the faucet when you want hot water and it's there, 50 gallons of it at a steaming temperature of 150 degrees.

The Rise of Tom Hadley

By C. F. Whitman Chapter VI

Tom Finds Some Good Friends

A walk of about a quarter of a mile brought Tom into the vicinity of a fine set of buildings on a magnificent estate. In front of the house were several large shade trees. A sun-drenched driveway led through them from the road, past the walk, to the main house, to the stable, and to the outbuildings. Under some of the big trees were seats, where loungers might rest in their cooling shade. There was no doubt in Tom's mind that this was the home of the magnate of the village, Mr. Jarvis Benton. Depositing his sack on the ground near one of the seats, he went to the front door and rang the bell. A female servant appeared and inquired what was wanted.

SERVANT GIRL

"Does Mr. Jarvis Benton live here?" Tom asked. "If so I would like to see him."

"Yes, he does. He has just come in from the bank, and he is very important. He won't come to be disturbed," she replied, after scrutinizing the very earnest-looking boy.

"It is important," he said, "to see him. I'm quite sure he won't mind my seeing him. I must be a stranger in this place, and I should have inquired if Mr. Benton should be here. The matter is important to me."

At this juncture a very handsome and pretty young miss, not quite Tom's age, came to the door. She had a pair of dark, expressive eyes, red cheeks, a small, less than perfect nose, and a sweet smile. Tom tilted his head and looked at her as she appeared, at which a crimson blush overspread her pretty face. She was just in time to hear the last remark of the servant girl and Tom's reply. The young lady asked:

"What is all this talk about, Ansel? The young gentleman says that it is important for him to see father. What didn't you ask him to go in?"

"Won't you come in, sir?"

"Thanks, miss, I have liked it for a few miles and am heated and dusty—hardly presentable—so I'd prefer to see Mr. Benton in the cool shade of these splendid great trees."

Young lady: "I don't see, sir, but you look presentable enough, however. I'll call father."

Mr. Benton soon came to the door, and sizing up the young man before him with a critical eye, inquired: "Well, young man, what is it you want of me, sir, under the trees, where we won't be disturbed and I can cool off, I will tell you."

"Wondering what the strange young man has to say to me that was important to him," he followed Tom to a seat near, saying:

"Well, young man, fire away. Tom then told him the plot to break into his clothing store, which he had overheard from the three tramps. To Mr. Benton's inquiries, Tom gave his name, age, education and family and added that he was out on a hike to find for himself a situation, and was confident he could make good if he was given the opportunity. Mr. Benton was much impressed with the manly appearance of the young man. He thought it strange, however, that the burglars should want to break into a clothing store rather than a bank, which he wouldn't have been surprised at, but Tom assured him that the tramps, from their statements, were not safe breaking burglars, but footpads, who wished to get well clothed before going on their winter tramp South, and closed the conversation with: "And now, sir, you have the whole story and know what to do to protect your property and capture the tramps, and as I will go to the hotel, as I suppose you have one in the place."

"Wait a minute, young man. It all seems so strange, but what you say impresses me quite strongly, that you are honest, have considerable ability and can be trusted, and I'll take the risk of being laughed at, if it should turn out that my store. Yes, we have a public house, here—one of the best in all this region, the Norwegian Hotel, run by Mr. John Woodman, the prince of landlords, and his capable wife, but you won't go there now as I shall require your assistance."

"I don't know how much help I can render you, but I'll do whatever I can, if you desire my assistance."

They went into the house and motioning Tom to a seat in the large hall, Mr. Benton said: "Wait here a moment while I speak to Mrs. Benton." He soon reappeared with his wife and Tom was introduced. She greeted him with a smile and a warm clasp of her hand. "Glad to know you, Mr. Hadley," she said. "You will be welcome here, while you stay with us." Her greeting was so sincere and motherly that his heart went out to her at once. "Jarvis, he will want to wash up a little," she said. "While supper is being prepared, and he had better be shown up to the room next to Charley's. I think our son has just come in and I will send him here. You will excuse me, Mr. Hadley, while I look after the supper."

"While supper is being prepared, and he had better be shown up to the room next to Charley's. I think our son has just come in and I will send him here. You will excuse me, Mr. Hadley, while I look after the supper."

"I don't know how much help I can render you, but I'll do whatever I can, if you desire my assistance."

They went into the house and motioning Tom to a seat in the large hall, Mr. Benton said: "Wait here a moment while I speak to Mrs. Benton." He soon reappeared with his wife and Tom was introduced. LARGE BERYL FOUND

The finest specimen of green beryl at the Bumpus quarry at Albany has been discovered. This beryl, found beneath one of the others of good quality, is the largest in the world and valued at several thousand dollars.

The newly found crystal is six feet in diameter and so far 16 feet if it has been uncovered, with approximately four feet more to be excavated. Many scientists visited the quarry last summer, to view the huge beryl crystals, but that recently found is much larger than any of the others.

NARROW GAUGE WRECK

The locomotive and one car on the narrow gauge railway left the rails and tipped over, Thursday afternoon, June 12, when the train was a short distance out of Bridgton.
